

The Sky is the Limit

The Sky is the Limit is a simulation exercise that aims to give hands-on experience with standards processes. The participants will acquire a feeling for the stakes in standardization, gain insight in standards-related interests and strategies (their own, those of others, the common interest), and experience the relevance of procedures in standards processes.

Participation

You are going to participate as one of four stakeholders involved in a standards setting process to decide on a regulatory standard for a new product, the Flying Car. The negotiating parties all represent different interest groups. You are going to work on establishing a set of rules through deliberation in a standards committee.
