

Mentoring Program Application

Program Information

The USNC mentoring program is intended to be an opportunity for emerging standards professionals to enter into a one-on-one relationship with a more experienced member of the standards community for the purpose of retention, development and overall success.

Whereas training is typically a significant volume of information passed from one to many, mentoring is a partnership in which two individuals set their own agenda, and the mentor provides guidance to the protégé in order to assist in achieving the latter's goals. A mentoring program would foster the growth of emerging standards and conformity assessment professionals and enable them to be successful in their endeavors, whether their goals are to take on leadership roles in US or International programs or to be successful contributing experts or delegates. The mentoring program can be seen as a way to retain new standards and conformity assessment professionals and as a means of filling the pipeline for future leaders in the USNC.

Time Commitment

Our pilot program will span a six month period. Program participants are asked to hold monthly calls with your mentor or protégé, however time spent shall not exceed five hours per month. There will be two formal check-in with program administrators, one around the mid-point and one as the pilot wraps-up.
